FEAR AND LOATHING IN ANY GENRE: How to Pump Up the Intensity and Impact of Your Fiction by Scaring Your Reader

Presented by renowned horror writer and CU Boulder professor, Stephen Graham Jones

Readers want to be scared, and not just in horror stories. Writers in any genre can take their fiction to the next level by learning to instill a sense of fear and anticipation in their readers. This workshop will examine how to create tension, suspense, and a really scary bad guy, as well as explore how foreshadowing, setting, and pacing can up the fear-factor in your fiction.

Limited seats available to walk-ins, but YOU MUST REGISTER IN ADVANCE TO BE GUARANTEED LUNCH

HOW DOES THIS HELP FIRE VICTIMS?

Pikes Peak Writers (a 501(c)(3) nonprofit) is teaming up with Tri-Lakes Cares (a long-time area nonprofit and United Way partner) to get your donations DIRECTLY to those impacted by the Black Forest Fire, and no one else.

Both PPW and Tri-Lakes Cares are waiving all admin fees and absorbing all operating costs so every penny of every dollar you donate to the BFF goes to those affected by the fire in the form of gift cards, food & supplies, and cash assistance for necessities like prescriptions.

Can't make it and still want to help?
